Then Dennison, bequeathed $400 to her out the first player, who ought to be of an estate valued at several thous crank and insist that attar of roses sand dollars, deviding the remainder to should be used to sprinkle the streets, must go to the board of health and kick. Then the man at the office of the board of health says it's blamed funny bow any dirt ever got in that part of the town, and the first player says, "By gosh, it's there," and he doesn't like the smell. Of course the city can't be expected to devote its time to hunting up smells that suit the individual pleasure of each and every citizen, but the man at the board of beaith office says he'il have the matter looked up.

Tells the Inspector.

inspector that the man up at No. 18,642 Carrion street is grumbling about the odors from some sort of rubbish, and suggests that the inspector make an investigation. But the inthan he can accomplish in five hours; because there sa't enough of him. It's beneath the dignity of a great city to keep enough employes in the health office, and if cleanliness is in any way allied to Godiness there may be a danger that someone would think religion was playing a part in the city

Besides a sufficient number of inspectors would spoil the game. But the inspector goes up there after a while and holds his nose until he gets around the corner of the block. Then he writes on a slip of paper that there s a dead cat in the street or that somebody's cow has persisted in dying in the alley. But the board of health doesn't have anything to do with cats that die in the street and cows that die in the alley. They're out of its line, and so the man that is mean enough to keek about such little things is sent to the city marshal's office. He departs from the city marshal's office with his stock of knowledge increased by the fact that the marshal is not the guardian or next friend of dead cats or cows, and that if he wants any such

Ev this time the odor of decayed cats and decomposing cows has become firmly fixed in the neighborhood and is regarded as a fixture along with the lawn and purior furniture. But the street commissioner is willing to do his duty and so goes up there some aftermoon to look it over. He finally decides that it might be a good idea to have the animals buried sooner than create any dissatisfaction with the municipal government, and so decides to have it done.

Just as he reaches this conclusion he discovers that there aren't any funds in the district to pay for removing them, and that he must go to the alderman of the ward. As soon as he gets time he speaks to the alderman about it, and the city father promises to bring the matter up at the next meeting of the common council. In the meancow are scattering their sweetness over property that's worth $150 a foot front. Lost in the Mud,

At the next session of the council the matter is brought up, and if nobody moves to refer it to a special commit-tee composed of the city attorney and the alderman from the ward, the nursance is ordered abated. But by this time the animals have become covered with the dust and dirt of the street and alley. Bendes, it's cold weather and hardly worth while for the giby to go to the add tional expense of digging then out with a pick-ax. The pers year if the mean man's family have typhuid fever and diphtheria the perghburs say it's because the onlidren are so mean, and the board of nealth advises him to boil the city water. The is the game, and if any man can play it, and win before the cold weathex comes, is in the language of a once popular song, a "Cuckoo, and his business he knows well."

This is the routine decided upon by the powers that be, but Mr. Hansom, of the city attorney's office, says it would help matters it the board of health would report all cases immedistributed the council, and decrease as sometimes chipped beef. LOOKING FOR A JOB.

Peelings of a Young Woman Who Was Thrown on Her Own Resources.

The first place I applied for was a position as governess, in answer to an advertisement that "A young lady of refinement who could teach so and so would find a good home, with small wages. Call between 19 and 12."

I rose at light the next morning and compelled myself to eat a hiscuit and drink a cup of milk. I was boarding myself then; that is, I lived in a tiny from and kept the spirit in the body with break and milk and cookies and I thought it would be necessary to look as well as possible, so I arranged my hair in the most becoming way, with soft curis over my too high forehead. and put on my protty best blue dress and a choice bit of lace at the throat. I had a few such things left. Then I surveyed need. Why, I could not govern anything larger than a year-old baby, who could be kneed and cuddled and chir-rapel into gool bamor. Then I began all over again, took off the blue dress and lace and smoothed back my bacr, which was naturally wavy and full of kinks, by wetting and brushing it vigorously, and fastened it down with a black band. I douned my plain old black dress and a stiff linen collar. Oh, if I were only tallert 1 tried putting chips in the heels of my shoes, but the effect was scurcely perceptible; besides, I reasoned that I could not endure that right along should the position be obtained, so I took them out. but it was the best I could do, and that high white forehead, without a stray lock to soften it, did look, I thought decidedly solemn and dignified. Then I practiced before the mirror to secure an expression "mild, but firm," and at 9:45

I started out; oh, no! I mean I walked majestically forth, at least I tried to.

The street and number were noted on a slip of paper in my pocket, but that was an unnecessary precaution. Was there any danger of my ever forgetting that number-"1419 Highton avenue, south?" It had sung itself over to me all that morning and the previous evening to all the tunes from "Yankee Doodle" to "Suwanee River." It had seemed as though the whole army of the world's inhabitants lived on Highton avenue at 1419. I moved up the avenue with what I imagined was a stately bearing. Who was there to know that my knees knocked together? The first sight of the handsome stone house filled me with dismay. I walked slowly by, as if the idea of stopping had never oc-curred to me. Then I flouted at my own weaknundesiness, turned, got as far as the lower step off the street, then. in a very panic of dismay, wheeled and passed on. I turned once more, with some uncomplimentary reflections upon | the high infantile death rate. But in my own folly, and forgetting my digni- those ty in impetuous haste, ran up the steps | published the discussions that were and touched the bell. How idiotically going on, large quantities of lactated I hoped that they might not be at home or that the bell might fail to work. But no, the door opened.

I was ushered in, and after a few moments the lady appeared, bringing with her two of the offspring of the house. evidently to pass their opinion upon the article displayed for their approval. The older was an overdressed girl of about fourteen, who surveyed me with haughty condescension. The other was a large boy of twelve years, with long. yellow curls hanging nearly to his waist. The mother questioned me about my attainments, while the young lady indifferently turned the leaves of a book and the young gentleman stared at me. She was pleased to know of my proficiency in French and painting, but I seemed so young and inexperienced: had I been accustomed to teaching? I was obliged to confess that I had not. us. She had misgivings. Her son was ill a great deal and required indulgence with wise training. I did not wonder at his illness, looking at those ridiculous babyish curls on that great boy in trousers. I thought his malady must be contagious. I began to feel extremely indisposed myself. And her daughter, she continued, was very mature for her years, and sometimes, perhaps, exacting

Bosun was introduced and requested "to fetch 'em "

Did Bosun hesitate? Perhaps for a moment, but the noble animal was only thoughtful, not embarrassed. Examin ing the circumference of the many hats, Bosun selected at once the largest, then the next in size and slipped the smaller into the larger hat and so on until he had comfortably nested the whole six in the one large hat. Then taking the entire hat package neatly by the rim, he brought the six bats to his master. "Learn" and "Teach."

The difference between the use of the words learn and teach is often insisted upon, and yet, strangely enough, it is often disregarded even by persons who should know how to speak correctly. The following conversation, which actually took place in one of the leading clubs of Boston, illustrates the way in which the error is committed: One member said to another, who was his friend, and whom he had met driv-

Mothers of Grand Rapids read what's There is an epidemic of indigestion and cholers infantum in this and other Health boards everywhere are reporting a startling fatality from cholera

Physicians say that in nearly every case the child is poorly fed and nour-ished, and hence the disease. "It is absolutely certain," says a physician in one of the medical journals, speaking of the alarming ummer mortality among his patients, "that the cause of this bigh death rate among infants is indigestion."

At the beginning of summer, the best physicians gave warning that pure food must be used for babies. That this warning did not reach every city and town in this state is evident from places where the newspapers food were sold and the best of diets for children was used. The result is, statistics show that fewer deaths have occurred in those towns and cities food was used. Comparisons of this sort are absolutely convincing. September is a fatal month for the little ones, and unless lactated food is used, the local physicians say that the dreadful mortality and increasing amount of sickness among children will continue.

The one safe plan is to feed infants on lactated food. Attention Iron-Moulders. The members of the Iron-Moulder's union, No. 213, are requested to meet at C. L. U. hall at 9:30 Monday morn-
